

You'll Also Receive Email Delivery Backups as Part of the Service.

One of the most important products used in any business environment is the company's email service. It allows employees and management to communicate with others in the organization as well as customers and vendors. Administrators have a wide variety of choices available when it comes to an email server however many of them lack many of the necessary features to protect users and the network environment. The Concentric (PEP) Perimeter Email Protect service can add this functionality in conjunction with your current email product and it wins our Editor's Choice Award for value and performance.

The service can be used in conjunction with Microsoft Exchange, Lotus Notes or almost any other POP3 email server. The PEP service connects to the server through a web address setup by Concentric. Your email is sent to this particular IP address and once filtered is then sent directly to your email server. While there may be some latency involved between the time the message is sent and when it is received in a user's inbox, the protection that is offered is well worth the small amount of time. Additionally, the service can be a standard requirement for companies that are located in more than one location.

One of the first functions of the Perimeter Email Protect service is the feature that validates the email address of the sender. Technologies located on Concentric's site is used to protect your email service from ever encountering viruses, spam, phishing attempts, email bombs, denial of service (DoS) attacks and other threats that emanate through email. Because Concentric handles the email through its system, you'll never need to pay for any other subscriptions other than the cost of the service itself.

There are other reasons to consider using the Perimeter Email Protection service that includes disaster recovery or data restores in case of interruptions. Concentric keeps a copy of your email activity on their servers for a period of five days. This means there is no loss of messages during your server downtime and a quick restore of the email when it is again operational.

Concentric has developed a new way to give your employees and network a break when it comes to email productivity and protection without
